ENGLAND'S STOVE WORKS ANNOUNCES COMPLETION OF NEW BURN LABORATORY

MONROE, VA (January 27, 2003) – England's Stove Works, Inc. (ESW) recently announced the completion of its new, state of the art burn laboratory. The laboratory is located on site at the ESW factory in Monroe, VA, and is already being used in the development of ESW's new, non-catalytic wood burning unit.

"We're really excited about this new burn lab," said Ron England, CEO of England's Stove Works. "We've already been able to key in on several major developmental issues with our new stove model, so that by the time we go for E.P.A. testing, we should have the unit dialed in just where we need it. And the fact that the lab is on site allows us to have our most knowledgeable people working in it every day, rather than sending them to an off-site laboratory for days or weeks at a time."

England said that the laboratory is one of the most technologically-advanced burn laboratories that he is aware of in the industry. It allows for research, development and testing of every type of heating stove that ESW manufactures: wood, coal, pellet and gas. "Add to that the fact that the software and instrumentation that we have installed in the facility allows us to pinpoint and adjust the most minute of details, and you can see how this benefits our customers," England said. "It gives the retailers who carry our product peace of mind that they are selling safe, reliable stoves, and it gives the homeowner that purchases one of our stoves assurance that this product is developed and tested to the highest of standards."

England's Stove Works, Inc. (ESW), based in Monroe, VA, is a family-owned business that was started by Bob and Ron England almost 30 years ago. ESW manufactures wood, pellet, coal and gas heating stoves and sells its product nationwide.
